The first jury trial of the term is scheduled for this Thursday morning. Three cases will be heard at the same time. Roland McKendrick and Rose M. Casey of Hobron are suing the Maine Central Transportation Company for damages resulting from an accident near Gray last April. McKendrick claims that one of the company's buses was so parked in the road that he was not able to see it and crashed into it. He asks $1,000. The Casey claim is $2,000 for injuries. In a cross action the transportation company asks $100 damages for damage to the bus. They claim that the bus parked in a lawful manner and that the McKendrick truck was operated in a negligent manner.

Llewellyn Ramsell Dies In Sleep

MRS. THURSTON TO REPORT STATE P. T. A. MEETING

Llewellyn Walker Ramsell died in his sleep about three o'clock on Wednesday morning. He had been ill with acute indigestion several days last week, but on Monday and Tuesday had been in the store as usual although he was not feeling well.

Mr. Ramsell was born in Boston, February 2, 1878, the son of James L. and Catherine Walker Ramsell, coming to East Stoneham at the age of 11 years. He received his education in the schools of Boston and East Stoneham and attended business college at Rockland. As a young man he clerked in the store of Winfield Perkins at North Waterford, and worked at Guildhall, Vt., and Winthrop for a few years. He then purchased the Bisbee store at Newry Corner and also served as postmaster. Twenty-nine years ago he came to Bethel and worked in John S. Allen's grocery store. After Mr. Allen's death he continued to operate the store for several years. He worked in the store of Irving L. Carver, and in the C. G. Hamlin store at Gorham, N. H., for a while, and in 1916 he formed the L. W. Ramsell Company which has since enjoyed a generous patronage. The company purchased the stock of the Lucas store at the corner of Main and Church Streets and expanded the business to include a most complete line of meats, groceries and provisions.

In 1899 he married Miss Addie M. Holt of Albany. To them were born two daughters: Adelaide, wife of Elwyn Storey of Dead River, and Kathryn, wife of Frank Trimbach of Bethel. He is survived by his wife, daughters, a granddaughter, Adelaid Louise Storey, and a brother, Walter Ramsell, of Oakland, Calif.

For years he had been an active member of the local lodges of Masons and Odd Fellows. He was a trustee of the Bethel Savings Bank and second assessor of the Village Corporation.

Private funeral services will be held from the home on Broad Street at two o'clock Friday afternoon. Friends may call from 12:30 to 1:30 p. m.

3:30 Adjournment

The committee which has had charge of arrangements for the meeting consists of Shirley Benson and Mrs. Esther Stanley of Fryeburg and Mrs. Ida Sturtevant of South Paris. These people feel fortunate in having secured two such outstanding people as speakers. Arthur L. Deering was one of the first four County Agents appointed in Maine 25 years ago. He began work in Kennebec County on December 16, 1912 and has been a member of the extension force ever since and is the Director at present. Having been connected with the Extension Service since it started in Maine, he is well qualified to speak on the subject which he has chosen.

It seems especially appropriate that Director Deering should speak at Oxford County on the 25th Anniversary of the Extension Service. Being a native of the town of Damariscotta in this county, many people are well acquainted with him and it is with a feeling of pride that Oxford County people think of him as a native son.

Miss Florence Hall is home Demonstration Agent Leader for the Northeastern United States. Her talk, "Impressions of Country Life in Europe," will be based on a recent automobile tour through ten European countries. While people here do not have the personal acquaintance with her that they do with Mr. Deering, she has visited this county several times and those who have met her are looking forward to hearing her talk with a great deal of pleasant anticipation.

The membership contest report will determine which team will have to furnish the free supper for campaign workers. E. C. Buzzell of Fryeburg is Captain of the South team and W. H. Conant, Buckfield, Captain of the North. The team scoring the highest percent of possible points will be the winner. The supper will be on the evening of November 12.

New Hardwood Process Enhances Timberland Values

George A. Richter, leading New England scientist, who developed process for converting hardwood into wood pulp.

Announcement of new process for utilizing formerly valueless beech, birch, maple, as well as spruce and cedar, proves boon to New England farmers and woodlot owners, increasing their potential revenues by millions of dollars. Meanwhile, New England's pulp and paper industry is working at top speed, with the $75,000,000 Brown Company, of Berlin, N. H., largest producer in this section, reporting that the rayon and plastics industries are taxing its capacity by heavy demands for its new hardwood pulp. Although 85-year-old company has full force of 7,500 working three 8-hour shifts daily, officials report pulp orders running 50% in excess of capacity. The above pictures show various phases of the pulp industry. 1. Hardwood cut into 4-foot lengths, ready for shipment to mills. 2. One of the Brown Company pulp mills at Berlin, N. H. Circle, hardwood chips ready to be cooked into pulp. 3. This gigantic machine, which resembles a large newspaper printing press, dries and presses the wood pulp. 4. Here's how wood pulp looks after it has been dried, pressed and cut. 5. Mouth of a digester where more than 20 cords of wood are converted into pulp at one cooking.

Maine's Heroic Martyr To Be Honored

One of Maine's most heroic sons will receive nation-wide honors next week when the 100th anniversary of the martyrdom of Elijah Parish Lovejoy is observed by public exercises in Maine, Illinois and elsewhere.

This young man, who was born in a modest farmhouse in Albion and received his education at China Academy and Waterville College (now Colby), is known to history as the fearless editor who crusaded against slavery nearly a quarter of a century before the Civil War and was killed for his convictions.

Three times his newspaper plant in Alton, Illinois, was mobbed by gangs of ruffians hired by the enraged slave-owning interests. The 34-year-old editor, however, refused to retreat from his position which he believed to be both legally and morally right. Among his courageous utterances is the following sentence which has been called "the creed of American Journalism":

"As long as I am an American citizen, and as long as American blood runs in these veins, I shall hold myself at liberty to speak, to write, and to publish whatever I please, being amenable to the laws of my country for the same."

When Lovejoy's fourth press arrived, he and a small band of his friends remained on guard all night against the expected raid. When the mob appeared, they attacked the newspaper plant, set it afire, and several shots were fired. Lovejoy was fatally wounded and died beside his press.

This incident on November 7, 1837, marked the first blood spilled for the abolitionist cause and a wave of indignation swept through the Northern states, stamping indelibly upon the consciousness of the people the importance of our constitutional right of freedom of opinion and expression. For one hundred years, Lovejoy has been known as the martyr to the freedom of the press.

The centennial of this historic event will be observed at Colby College, Lovejoy's alma mater, by a special public convocation on Monday afternoon, Nov. 8, with former president Herbert Hoover as the principal speaker. Several distinguished members of the Lovejoy family will also be honored on this occasion.

It is expected that the audience will tax the capacity of the First Baptist Church, where the event will be held, so arrangements are being made to accommodate an over-flow audience in the vestry of the church with Mr. Hoover's speech carried by amplifiers.

The address will also be carried by radio from 3 to 3:30 o'clock over Stations WLBZ and WRDO in this state, as well as over the Mutual Broadcasting System's coast-to-coast network. Colby College is also inviting Maine citizens to meet Mr. Hoover personally at a public reception to be held in the Colby Alumnae Building from 4:30 on.

SHORT COURSES OPEN AT U. OF M. NOV. 29

Short courses in agriculture, designed for those who can go to college only when the long Maine winter suspends most outdoor farm operations, open Nov. 29 at the University of Maine.

Three courses are offered, in poultry raising, dairy production, and potato production. Each course is divided into two units of three weeks. The second "term" or unit opens January 3. A full course may be taken this winter, or it may be divided between two years, taking one unit this year and the second next winter.

Each course has been planned to meet the practical needs of young men and women who are engaged in, or intend to enter, one of the three types of farming covered by the instruction. The courses are open to men and women more than 16 years of age. Applicants must have at least a good common school education.

There is no tuition charge, but board and room for each three-week period and a minimum amount for other necessary expenses, brings the cost to $30, according to the estimate of Fred P. Loring, director of short courses.

Personal spending habits may raise this amount considerably, but those who live near Orono and drive to and from the campus may spend less than the $30 estimated.

Members of the regular college staff teach short course subjects, and the university laboratories, herd, and poultry flock are available for practical instruction.

A folder describing the courses in detail is available without any charge, from Fred P. Loring, director of short courses, College of Agriculture, Orono, Maine.

VETERAN SLAMS POACHERS
(Bangor Daily News)

Sprawling down the side of a deep gully and up onto a hardwood ridge.... A foolish-looking red squirrel got a peek at me, took it on the lam for a nearby oak and, scampering into the upper branches turned and put up an awful bœuf about something... maybe he wanted me to get out of the place.... Well, it was okay with me.... I was glad to go for I had already wasted too much time in that gameless tract....

A Bangor guide dropped into the office last night.... He had read the piece about Tansey Norton being unable to see a deer in six seasons hunting in Maine.... He says he will take Tansey where he will see plenty deer and it isn't very far from Bangor.... A old fellow who has traveled the wilderness trails for many moons tells me that the day will come when the deer will be exterminated in Maine.... I don't like to listen to that kind of talk, but I had to be polite.... He went on to say that unless the poachers can be yanked out of circulation that day will come in the not too distant future.... He told me of several slaughters made by poachers a few years ago.... He classed the poachers, those that hunt deer at night with lights, as meat hunters, thrill hunters, and wise guys.... He's about right.... I know several of the latter class.... you know, big shots.

Any Kid Could Do It

The meat hunter kills the deer for the money he can get for them.... The thrill hunter does it for the fun of the thing, but the wise guy does it because he thinks it's smart.... Yes, sir, it takes a brainy man to kill a deer under a light.... A very big job.... A job that any ten-year-old kid could do.... A man who will hold a deer with a light and shoot the poor, helpless devil down is no better than a prize fighter who, after dropping an opponent, proceeds to kick him in the face.... But when one of the wise guys is caught there is nothing funnier than listening to him whimper and beg.... The wardens are bearing down, but, being outnumbered, they can't nab all of the outlaws.... As Walter Winchell said, if the deer had a gun, too, the poacher wouldn't dare get within a mile of the animal.

THE MODERN "LIBERAL"

ECONOMIC HIGHLIGHTS

Happenings That Affect the Dinner Pails, Dividend Checks and Tax Bills of Every Individual, National and International Problem: Inseparable from Local Welfare

Mr. Roosevelt's announcement of a special session of Congress, to convene November 15, cannot be headlined as a surprise. As this column pointed out some time ago, men in touch with the White House were convinced that the President had determined on a special session months ago, and the only question was the precise date.

Asserted reason for the session is new farm aid legislation, with Federal hours and wages as runners-up in importance. But in the view of some commentators, the real purpose of the special session has not been officially announced.

Those who follow politics have noticed a rather remarkable change in Mr. Roosevelt's more recent speeches and public announcements. He has been much less critical than in the past of the groups which oppose his Administration's aims and methods. On his swing around the country, most of his major and minor talks were comparatively mild in tone and wording. It has been widely said by responsible newspaper men, that the speech he had originally planned to deliver at Bonneville was a slashing attack on the opposition and that he changed his mind, once he got away from the always stultifying air of Washington, and substituted the calm and relatively dispassionate speech he actually delivered.

As a consequence, to use the words of Paul Mallon, there is a strong feeling that "all this maneuvering of the past few weeks is a clever and effective screen for a rather complete unannounced reformation of the New Deal from within."

Mr. Mallon cites a "good friend of the White House" as authority for the statement that the President has: 1. Definitely renounced the plan of heavy government spending to bolster business and prices; feels that government spending must be reduced and the budget balanced, and that price rises must be halted. 2. Abandoned the Supreme Court reorganization measure. 3. Come to the belief that the government can do more for the country by returning to two of the original objectives of his administration—farm aid, and control of wages and hours. 4. Declined to center attention on international affairs (this widely praised Chicago speech marked the send-off hero) to "cover removal of emphasis from old policies which have failed."

If all this is true, and there is certainly abundant evidence to justify the guess that it is at least partly true, the New Deal is not only undergoing a reformation but a revolution. This does not mean that the President has eliminated all the more "radical" phases of his past program—he still believes in big-scale government hydro-electric developments, a more strongly centralized government; increased power for the Executive. It does mean that some of the theories which caused a major split within his own party, to say nothing of intensifying the opposition of the other party, may have been dropped overboard. At any rate, the theories detailed by Mr. Mallon, and held by other experts in the exciting political field, are worth thinking about. Whether or not they are accurate to any important degree will be proven next January.

Business has been quiet lately—and the labor index of activity is substantially below the high levels reached this spring and early summer. The steadily falling stock market has been a depressive factor, even though most economists minimize the loss in security values, and anticipate an upward trend in the near future.

In spite of improvement in certain fields, Business Week's typical barometer of business conditions has recently been slightly below the level touched during the same weeks last year. Major factor in the drop has been the curtailment of steel mill operations.

THE LOW DOWN from HICKORY GROVE

Little towns tryin' to get to be big towns, and big towns tryin' to be even bigger places, they are everywhere. And Philadelphia, she is breakin' her neck to catch up with Chicago. And N. Y., she is lookin' at London. I cannot see what good it could do—except the Secy. of the Commercial Club could keep his job, or maybe more people have nervous prostration.

And I was readin' where a little town in California, it says it is determined to keep on bein' little. And this place, if this news gets out, it may have its hands full doin' so, so I will not tell its name.

But this little place, boy, I saw it, and it will intrigue you, with the ocean on one side and stylish little stores—it is as pretty as a picture. And it has no lunch clubs—and if a person has a tuxedo and feels that he has got to indulge in a speech, he must go elsewhere.

A town that is proud of bein' quiet and little, that is news—bigger ever, than bitin' a dog.

Yours, with the low down,

JO SERRA

OXFORD COUNTY UNITED PARISH

The weeks roll around very fast as they roll forward now that we bring us much of regret. Each week that passes means that we are that much nearer the time when the Swank family is going to move from the North Waterford Parsonage. That does not sound at all cheering!

However, we must think of our joys as well as our sorrows. One of the pleasant events of the Center Lovell Church, each year, is its Annual Roll Call Dinner. This occasion is scheduled for Saturday noon. We will also remind you that on Thursday evening, and on Friday evening of this week there will be a Circle Supper at East Stoneham and Center Lovell, respectively.

On Sunday morning we will have the Communion Service in the different Churches. The services are held as follows: Center Lovell, North Waterford and Waterford Federated, at 10:00 A. M. East-Stoneham and Albany at 11:15. Sunday School follows the service in the three first named, and comes before at the other two Churches. We are glad to announce that a Sunday School is being started at this time at Center Lovell. We wish you might all have looked in last Sunday upon the Rally Day Service at East Stoneham. The service conducted by the Young People of the Church, now in High School; and there was a large attendance. Our congratulations to all who worked on that project.

The Outing Club met last Monday evening and started plans for its Winter Carnival, setting its date tentatively for Feb. 19, 1938. As we write these notes we are looking forward to a pleasant evening at the Wilkins House to-night (Wednesday) when the men are entertaining their ladies at their monthly meeting.

Speaking of Annual Meetings the Annual Meeting of the United Parish Council will be held at Center Lovell next Thursday evening, Nov. 11th.

Next week the Larger Parish Fellowship of Maine is to meet with us and also with the Umbagog Interstate Larger Parish. On Monday evening the Grange at Newry will serve supper to the visitors and others who are attending the regular monthly meeting of the Oxford County Recreational Council. The delegates of the Fellowship are invited to this event as a demonstration of the County-wide recreational program. Then on Tuesday they will meet at Waterford and we are expecting that Dr. Paul L. Vogt of Washington, D. C., will be present to discuss Adult Education. Discussions of many of the Larger Parish Problems will follow at the other sessions. Remember in connection with this that the North Waterford Circle will serve supper on Tuesday evening, and all are invited.

Well, well! Here is a notice! The Albany men and their confederates are serving supper on Friday evening on next week. That, you know, is a real occasion.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED BEFORE

Robert Conway, British diplomat in the East, who has been missing more than a year, has been found in a little Chinese mission by Lord Gainsford. Conway has no recollection of his past life but readily agrees to return to England with Gainsford. On the boat Conway hears a famous pianist playing at the ship's concert. Conway goes to the piano after the concert and begins to play strange, beautiful melody. The famed pianist disagrees with Conway when the latter insists that it is a Chopin study. "It was never published. I learned it from a man who was one of Chopin's pupils." "That's impossible," the pianist insists. "A pupil of Chopin's, if he were alive today, would have to be more than a hundred and twenty years old." "What of it?" Conway snaps and then he rushes from the room. In his stateroom Lord Gainsford finds Conway packing his bag. "I must leave you," he says. "That music brought it all back to me. Shangri-la! I remember it all now." Gainsford urges Conway to tell his story. Conway begins.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORYChapter Two

Flames from the burning city of Baskul darted high into the night sky and cast a weird illumination over the bedlam of the flying field on the outskirts of the city. In the distance there was the steady rumble of gunfire and the solitary road from the city was choked with Chinese refugees fleeing from the demoniac fury of the bandits.

The airport itself was already packed, overflowing with wild-eyed, hysterical Chinese seeking refuge from their attackers. Floodlights on the field silhouetted their figures as they raced around seeking lost friends or families. A British Army transport plane was drawn up on the runway in front of the office building. Its motor idling.

The door of the building opened and Robert Conway, the British Consul, came out followed by a small group of terrified whites. With Conway in the lead, they sought their way to the plane through the horde of milling yellow men. There was a roar as the motors raced and the huge ship began to lumber down the runway. Conway turned and pushed his way back to the office building where the remaining whites were huddled.

His brother, George, was sitting in one corner of the room his ears glued to the radio. Conway strode over to him. "Are you through to Shanghai?" he asked. George nodded and handed the mike to Conway.

"Hello Shanghai!" Conway talked. "Colonel Marek there?"

"Right here, Conway. Go ahead. Where are those planes?"

"I've still about thirty people here. The whole town's on fire and the bandits will be here any minute."

"Send every ship we could find. Conway. They left Hangchow three hours ago."

At that moment George rushed in. "They're here! They're circling the field now!"

"All's well, Colonel. The planes are over the field now. See you in the morning."

Conway rounded up his whites and hurried them out to the planes sending the women and children in the first planes.

The last plane jockeyed into position in front of the office building and Fenner, the pilot, grinned down from the cockpit.

"Hi, Conway!" he called. "Bit of a mess, what?" Conway waved to him and smiled as he turned back to the office building.

Besides Conway, there was only his brother, George, Gloria Stone and an American, Barnard. He rounded up the little group and they pushed their way through the shrieking Chinese to the waiting plane. At the plane's door they were joined by another man in Chinese costume, a box clutched under his arm, who pushed his way into the plane. Conway grabbed him by the neck and was about to throw him from the plane when he wrenched free. "Let me in, you bighters!" he cried. "I'm an Engishman!" And, indeed, he was.

As Conway closed the door of the plane and the motors began to race several truck loads of bandits came lumbering onto the field and they began to shoot wildly at the slow moving plane. "Everybody on the floor! Quick!" They all crouched to the floor as the plane swung around, gathered momentum and taxied crazily down the runway. In a moment they ceased to bump over the uneven ground and took to the air. Conway peered warily out of a window. "Guess we're out of range now," he said. "Everybody all right?"

No one had been hurt and George slumped into a nearby seat. "Whew," he said. "That was a close one!" Conway grinned at him and then turned to the newcomer in the Chinese robe. "Where'd you come from?" he asked.

"I'm Alexander P. Lovett, sir. Why weren't you registered at the consulate? Serve you right if you were left behind."

"How did I know a war was going to break out right over my head?" Lovett demanded. "I had to get into these ridiculous clothes to escape."

"Where were you hiding?" Conway asked.

"I was in the interior — hunting fossils."

Barnard, the American, turned to Lovett. "Pardon me," he asked. "What did you say you were hunting?"

"Fossils. I'm a paleontologist."

Burnard stared at him blankly. "Oh, I see," he muttered.

Conway had dropped into a seat at the rear of the plane. "What happened to that brandy, Freshie?" he demanded of his brother. George produced the bottle. "Drink?" Conway asked.

The drone of the motors soon lulled them to slumber and the plane roared on through the night.

With the dawn Barnard began to stir. He opened one eye, stretched and looked over at Lovett who was already awake. "Morning, Lovey," he smiled.

"The name is Lovett, Sir," was the frigid reply.

"Well, it's a good morning, anyway," Barnard unabashed, replied. He glanced out the window of the plane and looked around thoughtfully. "Say, we're supposed to be heading east, aren't we?" he asked. "Of course."

"Well, seems to me we're going west."

Lovett peered out the window and then jumped quickly from his seat. "Oh my goodness!" he cried. "We're going west! We're going in the wrong direction."

From the rear of the plane George opened a sleepy eye. "Can you manage to make a little less noise?" he demanded.

"But we're going west Shanghai's east of here!"

George rose slowly, stretching and yawning. "Sit down and calm yourself. I'll talk to Fenner." He walked to the front of the plane and knocked on the glass panel separating the body of the ship from the cockpit. From the cockpit side a small shade snapped up and George stared into the scowling face of a strange pilot.

George ran down the narrow aisle to his brother and shook his shoulder. "Bob! Wake up!" he cried.

"Something's happened. That isn't Fenner in the cockpit."

Conway sat up and stretched. "You're having nightmares," he suggested.

"No! It's someone I never saw before. Queer looking bloke. Chinese or Mongolian — or something. And the plane's flying away from Shanghai."

"Send every ship we could find. Conway. They left Hangchow three hours ago."

At that moment George rushed in. "They're here! They're circling the field now!"

"All's well, Colonel. The planes are over the field now. See you in the morning."

Conway rounded up his whites and hurried them out to the planes sending the women and children in the first planes.

The last plane jockeyed into position in front of the office building and Fenner, the pilot, grinned down from the cockpit.

Harlan Andrews conducted funeral services in Portland for Mr. Johnson, who has made his home with Mrs. Emma Porham in Perkins Valley for several years.

Mrs. Annie Davis spent last Tuesday with Mrs. Herman Billings at Bryant Pond.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Strout of Mechanic Falls, Linwood Felt and Holvi Heikkilä were in New Hampshire on Sunday.

RESOLUTION OF RESPECT

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Divine Master to call to her eternal rest our beloved and esteemed Sister, Dorothy Hutchinson, be it therefore

RESOLVED — That in the death of our beloved Sister the Auxiliary has lost a loving and devoted member, one whose memory will ever be held dear to us.

RESOLVED — That the members of S. U. of V. Auxiliary No. 27 extend our sincere sympathy to her parents, her brother, and other relatives and bid them look to God, who though moving in wisdom unknown to us, yet doeth all things well.

RESOLVED — That our Charter be draped for thirty days in memory of our Sister, that a copy of these resolutions be spread on our records, a copy sent to the members of Sister Hutchinson's family and a copy sent to the Oxford County Citizen for publication.

He guides us with unfailing hand;
Sometime with tearless eyes we'll see
Yes, there, up there, we'll understand."
